

The day of this writing, the Illegal thirteenth, shall be a historic day for the Tauhan people, a day marked by celebration for generations to come.

It is this day that we learned that we are not alone, and that beyond the uncrossable strait lies new lands and a proud empire.

The Heralds tell us this land is called Dun Sancerre, and Empress Adélaïde de Val-d'Oise de Lesdiguières, First Of Her Name, holds dominion. If the Gods see fit to guide our Herald, then perhaps the Empress herself reads these words.

My courts have been endless with their questions to the Herald, and have been enraptured with the few tales they are able to share. Though, As often spoken in the lessons of Ispikei, stories ignite the mind, but experience alone lifts the soul.

To this end I ask for your hospitality and welcome as my people roam these new lands, and if your Empress be gracious, guides so they may better appreciate the majesty of all within your lands.

Of course, we also welcome the men and women of Dun Sancerre to experience all the wonders of the Tauhan Empire; it would be the pleasure of my priests to arrange escorts for all the people of Dun Sancerre so they, too, might enrich themselves with the light of the Rove.

More than anything else, it is the tales of the Dragonslayers that have ignited the imagination of my subjects. The descriptions of these Dragons evoke the most terrible beasts of the low waters, in times seeming to rival Ooun herself in ferocity and cunning. That solitary champions are able to face them and triumph seems a feat too incredible to be true, yet the Heralds insist it to be so.

It would be our Empires deepest honor to host one of these champions for a time, so we might hear such tales from the source.

They would be esteemed guests for as long as they stayed within our lands, and would have a chance to experience all the wonders that the Touhan empire has to offer.

My halls are already alight with speculation as to your reply, even as I write this letter. Know that all of the Tauhan eagerly await your response.

In Anticipation;

Uniter of the Fleets, Vessel of the Gods, Highest of the Touhan Empire, The Twice Born Prince.
