

For the eyes of the Twice Born Prince Only,

My Whist has begun to spread our Word to our neighbors. I have focused primarily on conversion of the northern Rahastan Tribes, along with the southern lands of Dun Sancerre. Alas, my frail constitution did not allow me to properly organize a push into the lands of the Kingdom of Grovel, but they shall come soon.

The Rahastan Tribes seem open to conversion- their current traditions focus around reverence of "Rahastas", some sacred swamp, and of connections to hearth and home. While the focus on "home" may be difficult to shake, the northern tribes have been separated from their "home" for quite a long time. I have instructed our preachers to focus on home as a place to come back to, instead of as something to revere in and of itself, and several of the Rahastans have been willing to combine some of our teachings with their own.

Sancerrens, on the other hand, are fanatically devoted to their religion of "Saints." They revere ancestors who have died in battle and glory, exemplars of their culture. Unfortunately, their culture prioritizes stability, loyalty, and commitment. Our preachers have been met with everything from disinterest to outright scorn. More time will be needed to make even simple inroads...

Some rumors have come to my ears through the preachers though: The word on the street says that Dun Sancerre is annexing Al'Daric, its southern neighbors. Should the southerners swallow that center of magical knowledge, it may drastically increase their danger... steps should be taken to neuter them as a threat, or at least to have fail safes and fallbacks.

*From,
Archwist Malhis*